1. YOUR IDEA OF A GIFT

Imagine a simple situation.

It is someone you love's birthday. Or Christmas is approaching. You are thinking about what to buy for your partner, child, parents, or close friend.

You start looking.

You browse shops, the internet, recommendations, and reviews. You compare prices and think about what might make them happy.

And finally you say to yourself:

“This is something they will definitely like.”

But what did you base your choice of gift on?

On what you would like to receive yourself?

On what is currently popular?

Or on what the person you are giving it to actually needs and wants?

This question is more important than it may seem.

When choosing a gift, we often start from our own inner picture of the world. We have a certain idea of the person we want to give a gift to. We think we know them well, know what they like, what they enjoy, and what will make them happy.

But people change throughout their lives.
